Actor Jeremy Renner was injured trying to save nephew

BBC – Actor Jeremy Renner was trying to stop a snowplough from crashing into his nephew when he became trapped and it crushed him, a police report discloses. The Marvel star was using the six-tonne PistenBully plough to help Alexander Fries free his car from the snow. But the large vehicle then began to roll down the hill, a Washoe County sheriff's department report said.

Visit diverse cultural and recreational facilities in Tehran Book Garden

Tehran Book Garden is a cultural complex located in Tehran's District 3.

The compound is designed in the style of traditional Iranian terraced gardens, including foliage and trees, and is dedicated to a series of cultural and educational activities, wsdg.com reported.

In addition to its eponymous collection of books – one of the largest in Iran – the complex also includes a children's science park, art galleries, theaters and cinemas, and outdoor event spaces.

Program

The acoustic goals for the main interior space were to replicate the experience of being in a small, comfortable library. In addition to this, the cinema, theater, and activity centers needed to be acoustically isolated from the main areas, so that people reading would not be disturbed by crowd noise from other areas. Finally, the acoustic solutions for these areas needed to be visually discrete so as not to block natural light from entering the main areas, or to distract from the design of the space.

Design

The colors of the baffle ceilings were matched to the surrounding so that they blended in without distracting from the architecture. For the cinema, drama theaters, café, and lounge areas, a selection of fabric, drywall, and perforated wood materials were outsourced locally for an organic look that blended with the aesthetics of the interior design.

These rooms were acoustically isolated, using gypsum in a double wall configuration so that sounds from these rooms would not disturb the main area.

A cultural and dynamic atmosphere has provided a window to wisdom, and has turned into a sense of identity for Tehran.

The Tehran Book Garden has obtained positive feedback internationally. If you are a bibliophile or a student, the Book Garden can suit your needs. If you have children and are looking for a quiet environment with facilities for children, the book garden is an attractive option for a scientific and recreational tour. Finally, if you are not in any of these groups and only want to spend a different kind of afternoon, the Book Garden is still a unique option for browsing.

Previously, the only major experience of books and bookstores in Tehran was the Tehran International Book Fair. The Book Garden is designed to meet the constant need of the capital's residents for cultural products, especially books. The Tehran Book Garden is a multi-year project that has been built on the hills of Abbasabad, next to the National Library of Iran, with several years of efforts to design a dynamic urban space.

It is the biggest collection of books and scientific entertainment in Iran, and the largest bookstore in Iran. According to Newsweek magazine, it is one of the largest bookstores in the world.

'Oldest and most complete' mummy found in Egypt

Egyptian archaeologists have uncovered a Pharaonic tomb near the capital, Cairo, containing what may be the oldest and "most complete" mummy yet to be discovered in the country.

The 4,300-year-old mummy was found at the bottom of a 15-metre (49-foot) shaft in a recently uncovered group of tombs dating back to the fifth and sixth dynasties of the Old Kingdom near the Step Pyramid at Saqqara, Zahi Hawass, director of the team, told reporters on Thursday.

The mummy, of a man named Hekashepes, featured a "gold-leaf covering" and was in a limestone sarcophagus that had been sealed in mortar, Al Jazeera reported. "I put my head inside to see what was inside the sarcophagus: a beautiful mummy of a man completely covered in layers of gold," Hawass said. "This mummy may be the oldest and most complete mummy found in Egypt to date."

Among other tombs found was one belonging to Khnumdjedef, an inspector of officials, supervisor of nobles and priest during the reign of Unas, the last pharaoh of the fifth dynasty. It was decorated with scenes of daily life.

Another tomb belonged to Meri – "keeper of the secrets and assistant to the great leader of the palace".

The priestly title of "secret keeper" was held by a senior palace official bestowing the power and authority to perform special religious rituals.

A third tomb belonged to a priest in Pharaoh Pepi I's pyramid complex, and the fourth to a judge and writer named Fetek, Hawass added. Fetek's tomb included a collection of "the largest statues" ever found in the area, Mostafa Waziri, head of Egypt's Supreme Council of Antiquities, said.

Numerous statues were found among the tombs, including one representing a man and his wife and several servants.

The vast burial site at the ancient Egyptian capital, Memphis, a UNESCO World Heritage Site, is home to more than a dozen pyramids, animal graves and old Coptic Christian monasteries.

In a separate announcement earlier in the week, a group of scientists from Cairo University revealed previously unknown details about a mummified teenage boy dating to about 300 BC.

By using CT scans, the team of scientists shed new light on the boy's high social status by affirming the intricate details of the amulets inserted within his mummified body and the type of burial he received.
