

Iran's late president Ebrahim Raisi (front-C) participate in the relaunch of a factory in Semnan Province on April 18, 2024.

by the parliament's legislation. This promise of constructing over 2,500,000 units practically transformed into the National Housing Movement, with 400,000 units delivered. If not for obstacles in securing land and facilities, which delayed the government's progress by a year, they would have drawn closer to the figure the late president committed to. It is imperative that the next government sustain the momentum of this housing movement initiated by Raisi.

Food packages in millions

The previous government had other livelihood schemes in the works. The agenda for the calendar year 1402 included a plan to introduce electronic coupons for food baskets containing 11 basic items. In February 2024, the government rolled out the so-called Fajraneh Electronic Coupon initiative to commemorate the Islamic Revolution's triumph, enabling over 60 million eligible citizens to benefit from the scheme's double subsidy. This initiative wrapped up on May 10, 2024, having distributed approximately 142 million packages to the public. Aside from a handful of queues that formed during the project's early days due to inadequate publicity, there were no further issues with queues or shortages.

Satellite launches

Iran's space industry, in general, and the launch and construction of its satellites, in particular, had stagnated for years, but the previous government kick-started a revival. Through its determination, 11 satellites successfully took off into space, setting a record. Raisi epitome of Iranian willpower Tens of pages are insufficient to review Raisi's economic accomplishments in full as the aforementioned instances merely scratch the surface. On May 20, following the inauguration of the Qiz Qalasi dam, the helicopter carrying president Raisi and his entourage suffered from an accident en route back to Tabriz due to poor weather conditions. It was announced the next morning that Raisi, along with his entourage, sadly passed away. However, during his brief tenure as president, Raisi demonstrated that by refusing to capitulate to the will of adversaries and rely on agreements like the Joint Comprehensive Plan of Action and FATF, Iran can surmount challenges and take significant, enduring strides forward through tireless efforts and practical measures. These measures include boosting exchanges with friendly and neighboring nations and harnessing the strength of Iranians. The Raisi government prioritized fundamental reforms over stop-gap measures, heeding the Leader of the Revolution's counsel against sacrificing the country's future for short-term gains. As a result, he attained partial success in stabilizing the economy, and had his tenure continued, complete success would have been within reach.
